Get ready for November 2019

This month, I have been mostly avoiding the punk music. Had a tour, had a time, listened to a lot of loud music, realised I needed a break. Does anyone else get that? Went to see Holly Herndon (it was extraordinary, as was AYA), went to a Jools Holland episode taping and witnessed the boogie-woogie first hand. Very nice, but now I'm raring for some blast beats and pogos, and November is the best month yet. More than 50 gigs this month, more to appear I'm sure, keep an eye out. and have a time. (More West gigs, please!)

One more thing. ✊✊✊✊ REGISTER TO VOTE ✊✊✊✊

Do you reckon there'll be any bands where their only traces of music will come from Instagram stories -do you keep a backup - is there a punk TikTok scene - am I feeling old right now (follow @anothersubculture, shout out to TURN ON THE TUBE)

OUT and ABOUT

Hi, my name is Creg (he/him) and I like going out and about, here's what I've enjoyed recently...

YORKSHIRE SCULPTURE PARK

I've never been into sculpture, often felt like they're strange objects dotted around galleries. But that's now changed since visiting Yorkshire Sculpture Park, I bloody love them. Perhaps that's to do with the location, Yorkshire Sculpture Park is huge and gives the art a lot of room, there are no walls of art or other people knocking past to distract you. The space gave me more time to look and think.

My favourite piece was 'Wall Dale Cubed' by Sean Scully, three giant cubes made out of stone. I found myself having quite a strange reaction to this sculpture, I suddenly felt overwhelmed and went completely silent. There was an urge to stop everything and just look at it for the rest of the day. I've never heard of this artist before and the internet tells me that he's an abstract painter so I look forward to seeing his work soon.

Yorkshire Sculpture Park is free, has a nice cafe and the gift shop is rubbish. Thank you to Leila Oh Baby and Grace for taking me there.

The London Review

'London Bridge' by Fergie
(from 'The Duchess', A&M Records 2006)

London has provided the idyllic backdrop for thousands of pop songs, and while most are abominations (Taylor Swift can keep Highgate and her posh boyfriend's coked-up mates for all I care), who wouldn't want to go down like London Bridge? Fergie's 2006 single makes a much stronger case for spending the night soaked-through on a SE dancefloor than Taylor does for licking the remnants from a phone screen at 5am.

The intro to London Bridge absolutely bangs. Slaps. Whatever you like. The 'OHH SHIT!' hook, the frankly ludicrous drum break, the air raid sirens!! I could be critical and say that Fergie has employed a tired veneer of London, the equivalent of those episodes of Friends where every cutaway was a montage of double deckers, phone boxes, beefeaters and (bizarrely) Richard Branson. I guess the difference is that while Friends has aged like a fatberg, clogging our streaming bandwidth as it once did our analogue Friday nights, London Bridge has flown under the radar enough to illicit a similar fond mid-00s nostalgia as when you could buy mushrooms on Camden high street.

A common theme in The London Review is that whatever we feature doesn't contain whatever it has in its name (the cheeseless London Cheesecake, the London Pizza that was barely food, let alone pizza) — The first thing everyone mentioned when I said I was reviewing London Bridge is that the video features the wrong bridge, and a gold star to you if you'd already thought about it. Some arsehole journalist once tried to catch Fergie out with this, asking if she knew she'd shot around Tower Bridge instead. "Yeah, it looks better." she deadpan replied. You can't argue with that.

¯_(ツ)_/¯
